

How to Fundraise Creatively and Successfully

Version 1: February 2023

Welcome!

Thank you for believing in solidarity and dignity

Fundraising can seem daunting, but once you get started you'll be inspired by the response.

I was wary of asking for donations, but was pleasantly surprised when I finally did, raising much more than I ever expected. One friend made an extremely generous donation, and said that he wished he could volunteer but didn't have time. He was grateful to be able to contribute

Tony, Refugee Support volunteer and fundraiser

Fundraising is also a great way to raise awareness of the plight of refugees, and to let people know that there are meaningful ways to show solidarity.

As a small, efficient organisation, we can guarantee that every pound you raise makes a real difference.

First, pick your superpower!

There are so many different ways to fundraise. For the best chance of success, choose something you're already good at or passionate about.

1. You're a volunteer

Giving up your time to volunteer with us is an incredibly inspiring act that will garner lots of admiration and donations from your friends, family and wider network. Don't be afraid to shout about it!

Tip: People love to follow your volunteer journey, so be sure to share updates throughout your experience via your fundraising page and on social media—and always include an ask and/or link to your campaign. The more personal reflections you share, the more people will be inspired to donate—including after you get home. Remember to include photos with your updates, and tag us on Facebook, Twitter and Instagram.

2. You thrive in community

You're a social butterfly who loves bringing people together. Community is where you feel at home and fulfilled. This is a true superpower, and there's so many ways you can use it to fundraise successfully—for example, by hosting a quiz night, poker night, wine tasting, movie or reading marathon, or a coffee morning.

Tip: If you've already volunteered, giving a talk about your experiences to a local community group, or at your own social event, is a tried & tested way to get lots of donations.

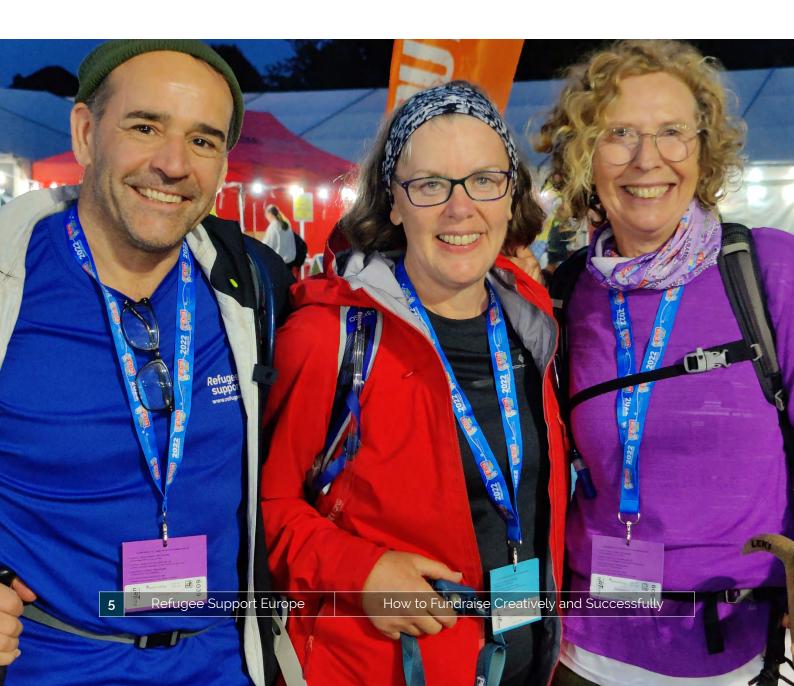

3. You're going for gold

There's no stopping you. You love a challenge and you're looking for new ways to explore your potential. Or perhaps you have a personal goal in mind and you're determined to achieve it. In any case, getting people to sponsor you is a powerful way to hold yourself accountable and achieve your goals, whatever they may be.

Whether it's Couch to 5k or running a marathon, learning a new musical instrument or reading more books, the opportunities for fundraising are endless.

Tip: Stay motivated by remembering that you'll get a shiny new medal, PB or skill at the end of it!

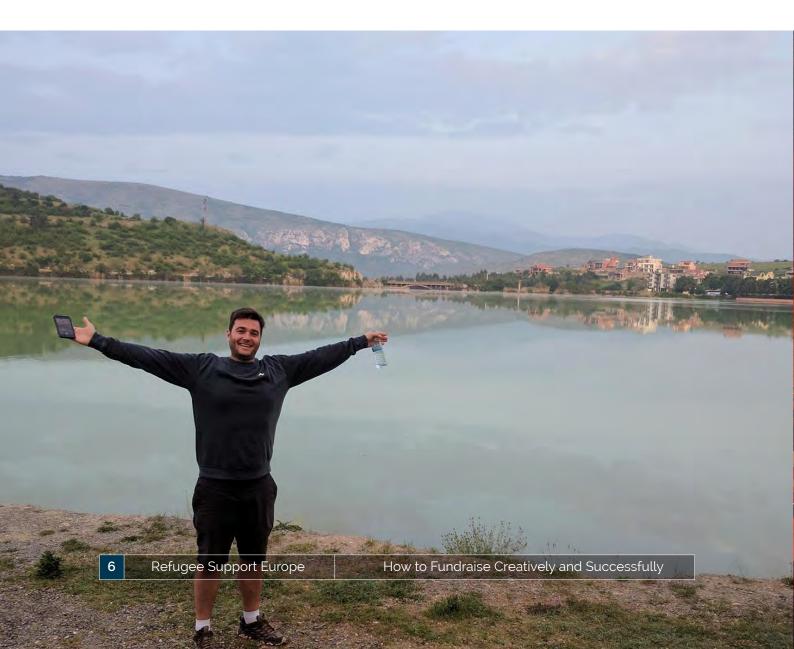

4. You're a memory maker

You're dedicated to living life to the full. For you, it's all about enriching experiences. You want to make memories that last a lifetime, whether it's a bucket-list trip, extreme activity or an unforgettable adventure with friends.

Sign up for a unique and challenging event such as climbing a mountain, doing a skydive, an epic trek or a long-distance bike ride, and make those sweet memories while raising funds for the cause you care about. It's a real win-win!

Tip: Volunteering abroad is an incredible way to make memories, so why not make that the focus of your fundraising?

5. You're an artist or performer

You're a poet, musician, comedian, or other type of performer, and you love sharing your art with an audience. Putting on an event for charity can really help with promotion and boost attendance.

Speak to friendly local venue owners and organise a live music event, a poetry reading, a comedy night, a mini-festival or other exciting performance.

Tip: These kinds of events are also perfect for hosting a raffle: Ask your crafty friends and local businesses to donate prizes, and sell tickets on the door.

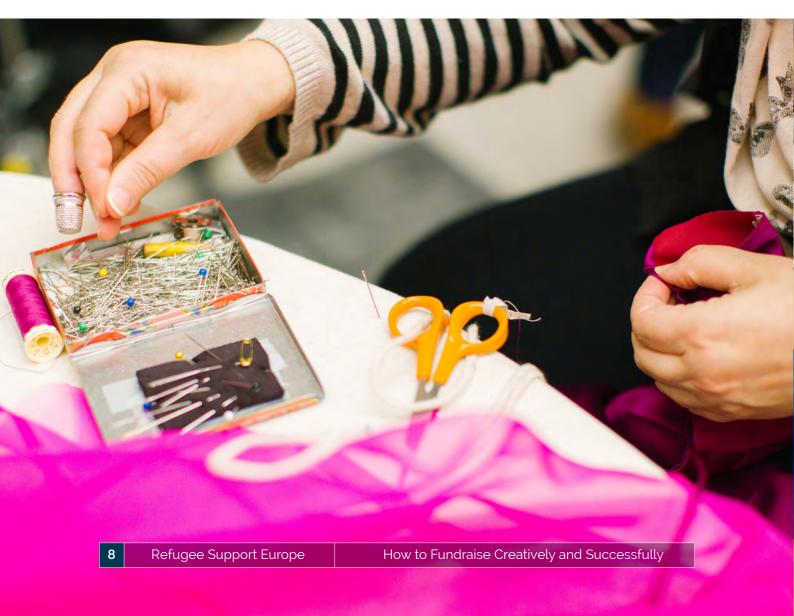

6. You're a maker or artisan

This one's for all the crafty people out there. You love making things, whether it's knitting, sewing, baking, brewing, cooking, pottery, painting.... or any other amazing creative skill. Harness your valuable talent by doing a bake sale, putting on a dinner party, selling your wares (online, in your community or at a market), or hosting a craft class or workshop.

Tip: Offer your classes or workshops on Zoom to maximise attendance, and make them regular rather than one-off.

7. You're an organiser or entrepreneur

If there's planning to be done, you're in your element—you can pull off organisational feats that leave your friends awestruck. Or maybe you're a natural salesperson. Either way, your superpower can be put to extremely good use when it comes to fundraising.

Whether it's selling second-hand books donated by your community; hosting a clothes swap and charging a small entry fee; clearing out your home or wardrobe and doing a boot fair or eBay sale; or putting on an event, large or small—the sky's the limit.

Tip: Collaboration is key. Work with artisans to help sell their wares, ask local businesses to donate products or experiences for a raffle and a venue for your event, and connect with performance artists who can put on a show.

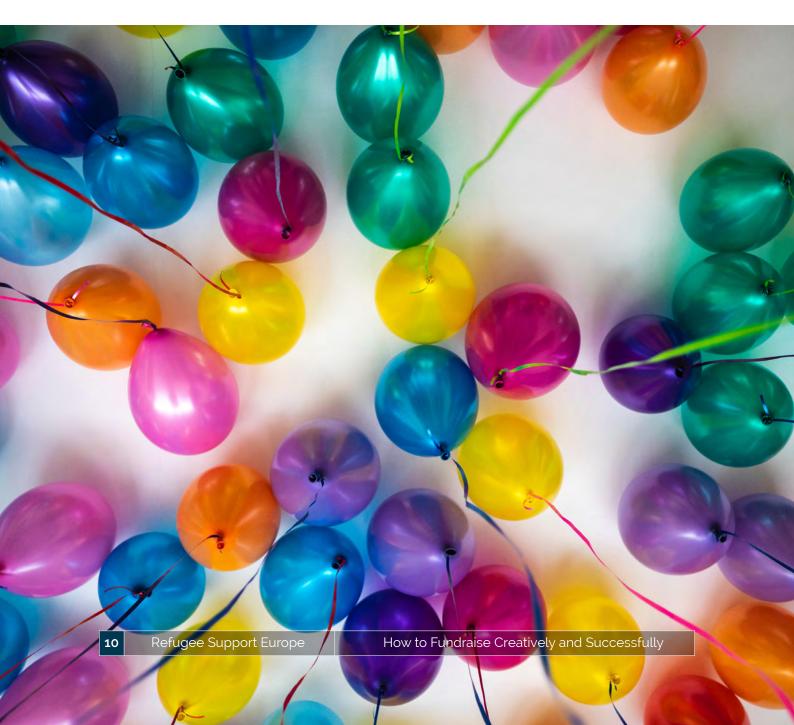

8. It's your birthday

Ask friends and family to donate to Refugee Support on your birthday rather than buying you a present. Facebook, in particular, is great for birthday fundraisers.

Tip: Set up a Facebook fundraiser a few days ahead of your birthday and let it run for a week or two afterwards, to give people plenty of time to contribute—and remember to post regular 'thank yous'.

They operate Dignity Centres in Chisinau, Moldova, and Nicosia, Cyprus. In the Dignity Markets, which are modelled on a shop, members can 'spend' their weekly allocation of points as they wish.

To date, more than 1,500 people from over 40 countries have volunteered to show solidarity with refugees in dignified, meaningful ways. Volunteers pay all their own costs and all donations go directly to meeting the needs of refugees

And, as a small, efficient organisation, Refugee Support can be dynamic and responsive—and ensure that your money goes straight to where it's needed.

Good luck—and enjoy yourself!
